

THE STARS

Aria Kim

Astrology offers those in crisis the comfort of imagining a better future...

a tangible reminder of that clichéd truism that is nonetheless hard to remember when you're in the thick of it...

Sorry, but your lack of experience but if no one else can gain experience in anything I would be able to work in a cafe. I'm a barista. I'm going to be a teacher. I'm a worker. Some slave to shipping.

Swallow it and say thank you regardless

Major Climate Report Strong Risk of Crisis as Early as 2040

5-year's ending Ruby Sol Angulo

Student Loan Agreement

Black Lives Matter

Hospitals

Write NY

$1,000

Affirmative Action Case

Taurus This too shall pass.

2020

Astrology is not a science, there's no proof of planets or stars affecting us like this from birth.

In fact, most of the recent zodiac resurgence has been through self-aware (partially) jokes, memes about two-faced Gemini's, jokes about how Saturn isn't in the right formation...

Articles of the zodiac signs as french fries, other memes, how the zodiac signs react when you have a tapeworm, yet at the same time people are looking at serious horoscopes and more complex natal sign charts with not just sun signs but moon, ascending, rising, etc. all showing a deeper sign of belief

Not many people would say they "believe" in astrology like how one believes in evolution or Jesus.

Jupiter won't heal your relationship, and Mercury won't improve that interview you have tomorrow...

They don't believe it predicts the future but they identify with Virgo, with a Libra/Scorpio cusp, with a Taurus...

Looking at a star chart won't do shit

For some, astrology's predictions are like Dumbo's magic feather comforting magic to hold onto until you realize you could fly on your own

