

DARE TO EXIST

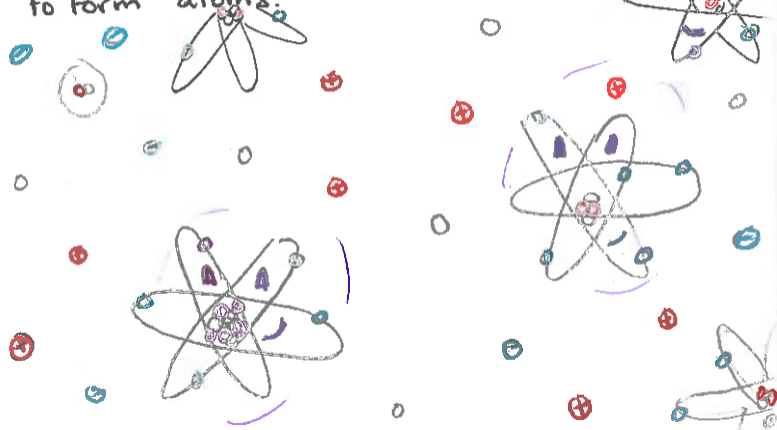

DARE TO RESIST

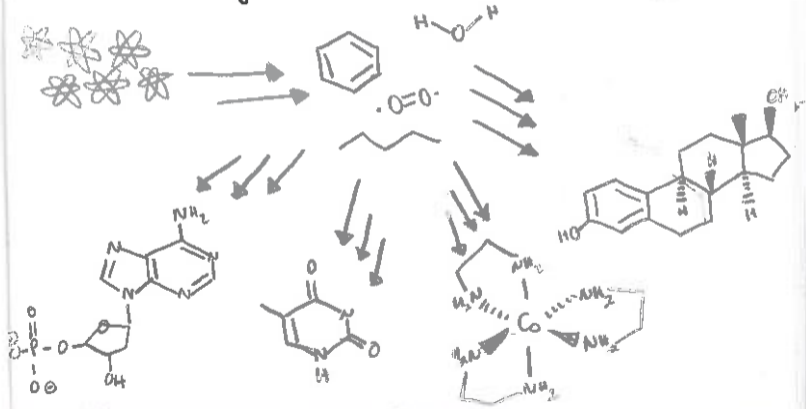

Disclaimer

The story told in these pages is not evolutionary or scientifically accurate.

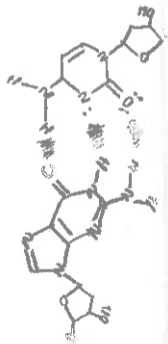

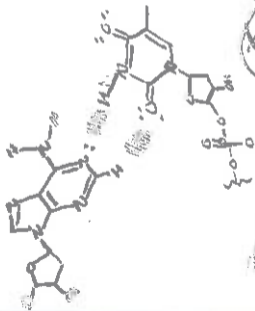

In the beginning, there were electrons, neutrons & protons that came together to form atoms.

Eventually, after many, many years, the atoms realized they were capable of so much more if they united to form molecules.

Through many successful & failed combinations,
the atoms formed DNA, the basis of life

One of the many things created through DNA was woman.

All women were strong, independent & fearless and they all had two X chromosomes. They were capable of anything & everything.

One day something happened. An X was mutated to a Y and man was created.

X X \rightarrow X Y

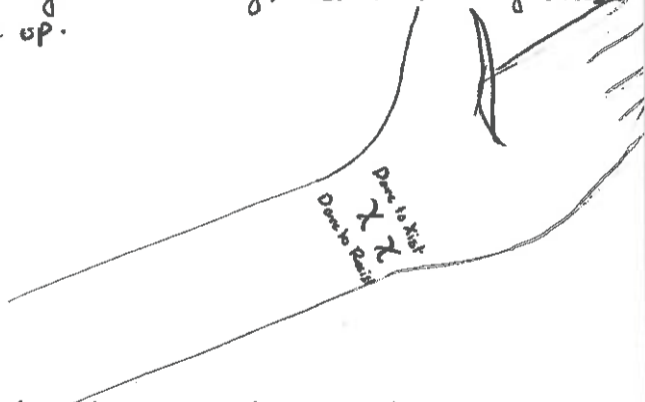

Men thought they were better than women because they had evolved from women. Men tried to control women. But women were too smart. They knew Y was not better than X. They were both equals and both should treat each other equally and fairly. The men were stubborn though. They refused to listen to women and kept trying to tell them what to do. No matter how much women tried, the men refused to change.

Instead of giving in, the women all decided to tattoo a reminder to themselves on the wrists of their non-dominant hands.

It was a reminder that they were women,
that they were strong, and that they refused to give up.

A reminder that even their weaker arm was still strong.

THE END

Notes

- Xist is the long non-coding RNA that inactivates one X chromosome in female mammals therefore explaining the use of "Xist" instead of "exist"
- Drawn to ~~some~~ scale, the tattoo would be as shown below. Red Xist is optional.
